PUBLISHED EVERY MORNING.

Sundays excepted.

BY HORATIO FOWKS,

at the

Newkirk Building, Division St.,
City of Kingston, (Rondout, N. Y.)

The DAILY FREEMAN will be an independent Republican paper, with an opinion on every subject, firm in its advocacy of freedom, equal rights and just laws for all men; outspoken in its opposition to the abuses and follies of the day, and especially devoted to the interests of the City of Kingston and vicinity.

The Telegraphic News Department will be complete and well supplied, the FREEMAN being a MEMBER OF THE NEW YORK ASSOCIATED PRESS, through which it receives and is enabled to present a full summary of intelligence from all parts of the world every morning.

Local News and especially City, Town and County News will receive special attention, paid correspondents being employed in all parts of the county. All news received from other than our regular correspondents will be paid for. Full reports of all important meetings will be presented, and in every respect the DAILY FREEMAN will be a First-Class Paper and a worthy companion of the WEEKLY FREEMAN.

Commercial and Stock Reports carefully corrected every day.

The DAILY FREEMAN will furnish for the breakfast table of its patrons the News from All Parts of the World up to 3 o'clock, A. M.

Jack Maynard's Call—A College Story.

BY THEODORE M. OSBORNE.

It was very quiet that afternoon in the college-yard. In all the straight cut paths that connected every door with every other, there was no one stirring. The wind had died away; and the only sound was the echo of passing sleighbells, dulled by the snow, that lay heavy on roof and branches. In Jack Maynard's room nothing was moving but the fire. In the wide, old-fashioned grate, the ruddy flame of a huge piece of candle leaped and quivered, now gleaming on the long oar over the windows, now throwing out a pictured face in tremulous life from the darkening wall, or lighting up the Venus of Milo in the corner with a half rosy flush. It played on books, thrown loosely about the big study-table; it sent rays into the high book-case, that glistened back from polished bindings, and from the silver cup that Jack had won in the races; it made the chandelier glow as if it were full of little jets of flame; it sent rosy sparkles among the cluster of German favors that lined the frame of the picture of the Harvard crew, and spent all its power in vain trying to banish the shadow of the heavy curtains.

Jack himself, a Saxon six-footer, was lying before the grate, with his chin between his hands, and his elbows on the arm of the lounge, pensively tapping the other end of that much-enduring piece of furniture with the toes of his top boots. Through the fragrant vapor that curled lazily about his head from a long-stemmed pipe, he was looking out into the yard, where the twilight was fast deepening among the gnarled elm-branches, and lights were already beginning to shine over the snow. He was not taking much notice of the landscape, for his face had a far-off expression; and he made no movement till his pipe went out, when he skillfully dropped it on the floor, without taking the trouble to move his hands from his head, and spoke:

"Robert, my child, are you awake?"

"Just what I was going to ask you," said the child, in a sleepy bass voice, from the depths of the easy-chair. Why child, nobody knew but Jack. Certainly neither of the chums was a child in stature, or in any sense except in the sight of the law. But Jack, who objected to sentimentality between men, was fond of using fatherly terms, as being a sort of combination of absurdity and affection, that could hardly be found fault with from either point of view.

"I was thinking, Bob, how many hearts had been broken under those old elms in all the years since the college was founded. Just think of the average damage every class day! Do you remember that effusion of Holmes's—something about—

"Many a classic beach is strewn
With dead, shapely bodies of blood-red stone."

Though I don't exactly see where the beach comes in."

"Probably refers to Harvard during the glacial period," suggested Bob.

"And I was wondering," Jack went on, "how many of all the engagements made in college have lasted. I suppose What's-his-name's calculating machine would give the figures easily. 'Twould be a good thing for a fellow to know, so that he could calculate his chances on mathematical principles."

"Jack," said Bob, rising and looming solemnly between him and the window, "are you smashed?"

"My child," said Jack meekly, "I fear I am."

"Dark, or light?" said Bob, sternly.

"Dark," was the answer, with a powerful sigh.

"That last assembly. I was slightly hampered on that occasion; and last evening I madly proceeded to put myself under a pile-driver, by calling on her. We talked about philosophy and cooking and music and art and women's dress, and—religion."

"Fatal symptom, that last," said Bob.

"I know it," groaned Jack.

His feelings were so strong, that his boots, inspired by his passion, tapped off one of the legs of the lounge, and let him down on the floor; where he lay in a state of dejection, pitiful to behold, until the six-o'clock bell rung.

"Going to supper," said Bob, "or is your appetite defunct?"

"My child," was the feeble reply, "where there's food there's hope."

Going to supper he kept musing aloud, "Ethel Hastings! Entrancing name! She carries at the De Vries." Said she was going to visit some other friends in Cambridge.—Knows some people in my place. What if she should be there this summer?"

And he clasped his big gloves in an ecstasy and struck an attitude.

With this thought, his spirits improved rapidly, so that when he entered that Spartan club-house called Commons he was quite radiant. He beamed upon the somewhat time-worn hours that waited on his table, and addressed her in knightly terms.

"What, ho! thou jewel of me heart! bring hither the wheaten refreshment, and crown me a goblet of bovine nectar."

The good-natured girl grinned, as if she were used to it, and complied with the courteous request. But Jack was too high to eat much. He handed everything within his reach to his absent-minded neighbor Brown, to watch his puzzled look; and finally succeeded in exchanging Brown's plate for a plate of crackers, without attracting his attention, and then accused him solemnly of selfish gluttony. He recited off-hand the first chapter of his new sensation novel, to be entitled, "The Bloody Fork; or, The Madman's Midnight Meal," wherein the pirate captain (who, he remarked, wasn't essential to the plot, but required by the rules of art) said, "Who, my diamond-lipped pig-glass!" no less than seven times; and all the principal characters were poisoned at the outset, "to give full swing to the tragic," as he said. "Nothing like appealing the mucker element when you write," he said. "What does the mucker element delight in? Billoud!"

He set the table in such a roar, that the steward had to stop him, and advise him to retire; which he did sideways, with covered face and uncertain step, after the style of the rejected lover in comedy.

After supper a crowd of fellows went round to Jack's room, as usual. But to-night he refused to try his hand at chess, and even dropped a challenge to be "cleaned out" in the most rapid and mysterious of games, California Jack, and went to reading intently. One of the others looked over his shoulder, and read aloud:

"Many an evening by the waters did we watch the stately ships,
And our spirits rushed together at the touching of the lips."

"Beautiful!" murmured Jack.

There was a general laugh as the reader said, "bad symptom, to appreciate that."

"Well," said Jack, "it's a safe thing to read, any way. The hero behaves in a sensible manner. He knows that one love lust doesn't prevent his trying again, and that he may yet have a chance to pass down that neat little property which he calls Alltheague to the next heir. I detest those French writers who make their disappointed lovers stand in the sea till the tide comes over them. If I couldn't get up a more rational hero than that, I'd never write a novel. Why, it's all imagination, any way. When a fellow finds that all is over, and his heart must be a rover, to the serious detriment of his heart, and all that, you don't suppose that there isn't somebody else that would do just as well for him, if not better? It doesn't injure anything vital in him, as it does when you shoot him. A man may die of imagination, if you can make him believe that he's sick. Just so a man may suffer mentally from a diseased imagination; and he never sees till afterwards how foolish that imagination is. The practical English novels in which everybody behaves exactly like very ordinary persons in real life, are better; though, to be sure, some of them grind along rather slowly."

"The trouble isn't so much that the novel null grinds slowly, as that it grinds exceedingly small," said Bob. "But don't you see that you reduce all our affections and griefs to one dead level of empty imagination?"

"Just so," said Jack. "There isn't anything real about it; and almost everybody sees it so, once or twice in his life, and then tries to forget it."

"If you're going into the Diogenes line," said one of the visitors, "I've got a tub I'd like to sell you. The bottom isn't sound, but the sides are strong, and that's all you want for a roof. You could keep it tight by taking a bath in it occasionally. By the way, if the old Athenian had used his tub for that purpose occasionally, perhaps he wouldn't have been so misanthropic. I think a philosopher in a tub, in some good position, say the corner between Harvard and Hollis, would be an interesting feature of the yard. Think how delightful to have the ladies put up their glasses, and say, 'was the dear disgusting old fellow once a student here? How interesting! Do tell us all about him!'"

"I shall certainly have to get a new tub," said Jack, entering heartily into the project. "I never could live in my tub hat tub. Just think how the little muckers would make it ring with stones! But then I could see that impracticable seat to keep my rations in."

The idea seemed to restore him to the height of good humor, and he lay in his customary position, on the crumpled lounge, gently kicking with his top-boots as before, when a loud knock was followed by the entrance of a youth got up in gorgeous style.

"Well, Charley, what's up?" said Bob.

"Been to make my party call on old Smooth, said Charley; and he's out. I thought I'd drop in and tell you that now's your time to call."

Two or three of the visitors rose hastily and were about leaving.

"My children," said Jack, in a aggrieved voice, "is this the way that you heed your instructions about economy of labor? I feel pained to think of such a waste of force. There's no need of but one's going. We can take all the cards, and walk up and down past the house, and leave them all, one after another."

"But the servant will notice it," objected somebody.

"The servant thinks all the students are just alike, and its easy enough to change your voice, so as not to be recognized. If none of you want to go, by Jove, I'll go myself!"

"But you didn't go the reception, and don't even know the professor," said Bob.

"The professor isn't in," said Jack, putting on his overcoat. "Now, you fellows write your cards, if you haven't any with you, and I'll take them."

"Why, Jack, you haven't got any collar on; and those top-boots!"

"How many times must I tell you, my child, the professor is not at home," said Jack patiently.

So he put on his big overcoat with a cape, and his fur gloves; and Bob settled his beaver on, after giving his hair a parting rumple.—He was just starting, when an idea occurred to him.

"Let me take two or three hats, so that I can change them each time."

He stuck them under his cape, and went out.

The moon was shining brightly as he crossed the yard. It had just risen, and shone through the Gothic windows of the library, lighting them up so that they glimmered faintly across the snow, as if the high hall were filled with the halo of the genius that it enshrined. The old elms stood up motionless against the sky, and the light reflected from their snow-covered roofs flashed through their branches. The snow cracked under his feet, and the clear, cold air, sent a thrill of life all through him as he walked rapidly away from the square towards the professor's house. Now and then the sound of bells would come out of the distance, growing louder, till the sleigh flashed into the light, and away again, out of sight and hearing. He half forgot the object of his walk, and his mind was full of many wandering thoughts. He thought of meeting the charming girl with whom he had just become acquainted, in his own village in the coming summer. He thought how happy he should be if she should favor him, and let him devote his life to her. He thought how pleasant it was riding with him now in one of those sleighs, to watch the ever-changing forms of the clouds, as the moon lighted them up. He almost thought he saw her image beckoning to him from a radiant cloud; then he thought of the warm climes that the moon was even then shining on, and of the bliss of wandering with her in some island of changeless summer. It came over him how much time he had wasted idly that he might have improved, if he had had such an object before him; and mighty resolutions arose within him.

These reflections brought him to the house; and, laughing to himself to think that he would sometime tell her about this absurd prank, he turned in at the gate.

The house was dark; but, after a few vigorous charges at the bell, the servant finally unlocked the door, and answered with the news that the professor was not at home.

Jack politely tendered his first card, and walked away. He walked till he reached a favorite corner, when he took off his beaver and changed it for a cap, and sauntered slowly toward the house again.

"Again the servant reported, 'not at home,' and another card was left. He walked back to his base of supplies, left off his cape and changed his hat again.

Another card was successfully deposited. Flushed with success, he made ready to leave the fourth and last card. He put on his cape and beaver, gathered up the hats and rang again.

All was silent.

Another ring peal.

A step was heard far inside the house. It came nearer and nearer, and finally the door was unlocked. Jack was about to ask the same question as before, when he saw that the professor himself was before him. He had just presence of mind enough to say, "Good evening."

"Good evening, Mr. —," said the professor, not recognizing one of his own immediate pupils.

"Maynard," said Jack, gaspingly, remembering his careless condition.

"Ah! Mr. Maynard, I am glad to see you; my niece and I have just returned from the concert, and you will pardon our rumpled appearance."

Jack stepped into the entry. The professor looked a little astonished at the fur gloves on such an occasion, but said nothing, and led the way to the parlor. A young lady was standing with her back towards them, as they entered.

"My niece, Miss Hastings, Mr. Maynard," said the professor.

She looked at him wonderingly, as he stood there, top-boots, cape, fur gloves and all, with a very pale face and very rumpled hair.

The conversation which followed must have been a striking one. Jack's ideas could only be kept together by the most intense effort, and he constantly contradicted himself, and confused them, mixing all the topics of conversation in one unfathomable muddle. He tried to give a reason for coming on that special occasion, and made a weak failure. The embarrassment grew more and more intense on both sides, till the professor, pitying him for what he supposed was his bashfulness, and seeing how uncomfortable he looked, said:

"Mr. Maynard, that cape must be very warm. Do take it off."

In his embarrassment, he touched the upper button, and it gave way, revealing the collarless void below. At the same instant the hats, which were only held up by the pressure of the cape, fell on the floor.

How he got out of that parlor he could never clearly tell. But, somehow or other, he did, and walked slowly towards home. The moonlight looked very differently to him now. The shifting clouds became troops of laughing goblins. He thought of the cold moonlight falling on the ice in the far north, and wished that he were buried a mile deep in those lifeless regions. He thought it wasn't so strange, after all, that Victor Hugo should have made his hero wait the rising tide, and wondered if he could find a suitable place in the Charles, whereon to sit and await a like happy oblivion.

Reaching his room, the fellows were all eager to hear his story.

"Did you leave the cards?"

"All but one; and here it is."

He felt in his pocket and looked blank. It was not there; it had fallen with the cape on that parlor floor, and he had left it there.

Word by word they got at the whole story out of him. They laughed till they could laugh no more; they rolled about the floor in ecstasies of mirth; but he sat silent and motionless. At last they saw how deeply it had cut him, and left him.

To no vain regrets. To be sure he had broken no law; but the petty element of the business kept annoying him more and more. How could he ever hold up his head in Cambridge after this?

He sat late into the night. Bob left him sitting there, silent and motionless, looking as if he had seen the Gorgon's head.

The next morning Bob called out, "Jack?"

"Yes."

"I hope it doesn't trouble you. Its all imagination, you know."

"My child, never sit on your parent when he's down."

He didn't care to walk about Cambridge for a fortnight. At the end of that time he ventured out. It was a dull, cheerless afternoon. The trees kept up a slow dripping, and the sidewalks were damp and slippery. The leaden sky cast a gloom over all the landscape, that accorded well with his mood. He was thinking that he was always getting into scrapes that injured him, that he was a useless member of society, that his life would always be dull and ordinary, and that he might as well stop trying to make anything of himself, when he turned a corner and came full on Miss Hastings.

He didn't expect her to recognize him, and was resolved to pass her without noticing the cut; but she stopped and spoke to him.

"Is this yours?" said she, handing him the card he had dropped.

"It is," he said, flushing at the cruelty.—He was hurrying on, but she stopped him again.

"He didn't see it. I picked it up and kept it. I saw through the whole thing. I never pitied any one so much in my life. You must feel awfully. Come and see me at the De Vries."

He was so overcome at the sudden revulsion, that he took her hand and kissed it, right in the street. Nobody noticed it, except a very small girl on the other side, who said "Oh, my!" and crossed over to get a better view of further proceedings.

Of course he had to apologize for the rudeness, and explain all about it at once. They walked slowly up the street; and just as they reached a little eminence, the leaden sky broke into great rifts before them in the west, and a flood of light glowed on the far off, snowy hills, and threw a crimson veil over all the sky.

"How beautiful the view is!" said she.

"Yes," said he, looking right in her face.

"What a lovely flush the sunset throws on it!"

What else she said is not recorded. But Bob said that when he came in that night "he was so happy that if you had stood him on his head he'd have walked off without knowing it."—Old and New.

The Bad Company Argument.

A great many good people express themselves troubled about the bad company they think Mr. Greeley keeps. He himself, they think, might do very well; but he must inevitably succumb to the influence of his bad company, is the bugbear that frightens them.

Now what company does Mr. Greeley keep? The Grantees would have us believe that the Tweeds, Halls, Sweeneys, and the blacklegs and swindlers of the metropolis are his daily companions and will determine his policy at Washington. Now it is one of the wonders of metropolitan life—the good company that Greeley always has kept and now keeps. In his Boston speech he very aptly alluded to this charge of “bad company,” saying the friends of to-day were those who had been his friends for years. And who are they? They are the best known and purest of American literary men and women. Metropolitan life is very exacting, and public men can hardly hope to entirely avoid contact with some bad ones in the rush; but the chosen friends of Mr. Greeley were those for whom the world has a most tender esteem. The home of the Carey sisters, those purest and best of our literary women, was the one he most honored with his presence. This was the center where gathered the literati, the wits, poets, writers and intellectual men of the city. The man's tastes all lay in that line.

How highly his personal honor, regard for justice and his word, is held, is illustrated by the numerous times he is called upon to arbitrate between friends in dispute. Forty years of toil have raised the poor printer boy to a level above the most aristocratic of New York's citizens, and made his personal integrity the pride of the people.

Can the warmest admirer of Gen. Grant claim that his tastes are literary and cultivated? Are they elevated? Are they not low, rather than high? And is his company good?

We do not specially deprecate Grant's visits to Long Branch, provided the public business is attended to; but his residence there the attraction for the literary and cultivated men and women of the land? Is he a congenial companion to such? It will hardly be claimed. But he does choose his company, and when he goes to Long Branch Tom Murphy is sure to be found there. He is representative, and his voice gives tone to the presidential circle. The company at the White House was never so low and common as to-day. If it's their company that is to decide the fight, Mr. Greeley is head and shoulders above his rival; for the tastes and habits of his whole life are surety that as president he will draw around him the best men of the Republic.

Queer Soreheadism.

Senator Schurz has communicated to the public his authority for the statement made by him in his St. Louis speech. Gen. Pleasanton says very positively that he had authority from the President to offer Senator Schurz all the patronage he desired if he would go for the President's San Domingo job. It has been observed that the administration papers, save the reckless Times, have been very shy, and have chosen very promptly the explanation that the Senator had been deceived. The Times and Senator Conkling, of course, were prompt to say “You lie!” but the rest of the apologists saw at a glance that that was not a strong position.

On the theory that Pleasanton has deceived Senator Schurz there is one feature that deserves attention. The Albany Journal practically admits that the President desired to be on good terms with Schurz, and says it was very proper that he should be. Now this amounts to just this—that so far as the President was concerned there could have been amicable relations, hence Schurz could have had his share of appointments. The point we desire to impress upon our readers is, that this man Schurz has been held up before the country as the Prince of Soreheads, and yet it now appears that the President (giving the most charitable interpretation to the matter) was in a friendly mood rather than otherwise, and that the probabilities were that Schurz could have had his share of appointments if that was what determined his action.

But the question of soreheadism, which has been advanced as the controlling reason for the action of all the Cincinnati Republicans, does not depend upon the President's part in the transaction at all. If Schurz thought he could have all the patronage he desired, then he had no occasion to feel “soreheaded.” Whether Pleasanton deceived him or not, it is quite apparent that Schurz had every reason to suppose that if he pursued a certain course he would have offices at his command.

The whole campaign against Schurz thus falls to the ground. Every argument he has advanced, every step he has taken, he has been met by the charge that he was a sorehead, and this has been deemed a sufficient answer; and yet it is now proven that Schurz (even supposing Pleasanton spoke without authority) was all the time under the impression that he could have plenty of patronage by pursuing a certain course, and yet he took the opposite. Instead of hunting for patronage, he rejected an offer of it which he had every reason to believe genuine and authorized.

As for the offer itself, the probabilities are on the side of its being an authorized one. Gen. Pleasanton was at the time on the most confidential terms with the President. He was an especial friend of Grant, and there was scarcely a man in Washington, or in the country if we except Tom Murphy, who had more influence with him. It must be remembered the President left no stone unturned to affect the action of congress on his St. Domingo job. Senators who did fight on his side were loaded down with favors, and it is no secret that presidential lobbying was openly, persistently done to carry the scheme. And there is probably not one politician out of twenty who doubts that Pleasanton's promises on behalf of the President would have been fulfilled if Schurz had gone for San Domingo.

POLITICAL NOTES.

Formy has weak lungs. He can't speak for Grant.

Ben Wade, like Colfax, needs rest. He can not speak in this campaign.

The Rhinebeck Gazette says the Greeley meeting at that place was a perfect success.

Spotted Tail, Colonel Mosby, and the London Times have declared for Grant. Two of these have no vote.

Corland village, N. Y., contains about 800 Republicans. Nearly half are announced for Greeley and Brown.

The New Brunswick (N. J.) Times announces that Gov. Charles S. Olden has decided to declare for Greeley and Brown.

Ten of the twenty-two surviving Grant Presidential electors in this State four years ago now support Greeley and Brown.

The postmaster at West Sholes, Mo., says, “I fight with Greeley, in defiance of the officeholders ring.” He should have a pension.

Our claim against England at the beginning of the rebellion was near $2,000,000,000. At last accounts it was down to about $3,000,000.

There is an astonishing number of invalids in the Grant party who are compelled to go to Europe for their health, and remain abroad during the campaign.

The man who now edits Harper's Weekly is the same one who edited that paper when it pictured Lincoln as a drunken boar, revelling beside the hie of the Constitution and the Union.

A dispatch from Fort Scott, Kan., says the Daily Star, the only Grant paper in this city, has now come out for Greeley. There are but three Grant men among the 290 German voters here.

The conspicuous support of Grant and Wilson by Commissioner Van Nort is a striking indication that the Hon. WILLIAM MARCY TRENCHARD and the Hon. HENRY SMITH are both in favor of Grant.

James Gleason, formerly County Judge of Washington county, and a Republican member of the State Senate in 1866 and 1867, made a Greeley and Brown speech in Salem, Washington county, last Friday. Carry the news to Hiram.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

A Wisconsin woman has had six babies within a year.

A diamond of the first water was found in Georgia a few days ago.

One of the biggest scandals of the day is the frequent production of Josie Mansfield as a credible witness.

President Grant has retired to Long Branch, where he is soon to journey to Canada to visit the Governor-General.

Benjamin H. Ellis of New York was enticed into a saloon, in that city, on the 24th, and robbed of a $1100 diamond-pin.

It is stated that Gustave Dore is in bad health. He has done too much work, and pays the penalty of that ambitious error.

Lieut. Cushing, whose exploit in the destruction of the Albatross during the war is well remembered, has been awarded $180,000 prize-money.

The Government Surveying Expedition to Nicaragua, sent out to find a feasible route for an inter-oceanic canal, has returned and report unfavorably.

It is said that the highest salary paid to a female teacher in this country is paid to Miss Anna C. Brackett, of the St. Louis Normal School. It is $2,800.

One Muller, a German teacher, was shot at a few days ago by some unknown person. Circumstances have since demonstrated that it was done by some vindicator of a German school girl's character.

Assemblyman Dominick H. Roche of Brooklyn stabbed Commissioner Henry Corr on Wednesday so that his life is despaired of. They were both drunk at the time, and Corr was the aggressor.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

“The Cook of the Period,” formed the title of the recent graduating oration of a sensible New Orleans school girl.

A woman in Jacksonville, Fla., has shipped fifteen hundred alligator hides to Boston within the past five months.

A lightning exchange commences an item: “As we go to press a man named Sullivan is being run over by a poney engine on the railroad.”

Five hundred thousand dollars of winnings at bluff is a neat record for card playing. That is what a San Francisco girl says she has cleared from handling the pictures.

The proprietor of Lamartine's former residence at Macon has sold in the last two years, to American travellers, over 4,000 quills with which Lamartine wrote his “Jocelyne.”

An advertisement in a Western paper informs the public that board for the summer can be obtained “at a large and shady brick gentleman's residence in the country.”

“I'm afraid I'm sitting on your crinoline, ma'am.” “Oh! never mind, sir, it's of no consequence; you can't hurt it.” “No, ma'am, it's not that; but the confounded thing hurts me.”

“How far shall this execrable uncertainty go, Adelaide, my beloved?” said a gallant young Romeo to his pretty Juliet the other evening. “Go to father,” was the prompt and satisfactory reply.

A Jewish Rabbi accuses a merchant of slandering him by alleging that he (the Rabbi) on a certain occasion dismissed his congregation with the Apostolic benediction. One hundred thousand dollars damages is the modest sum asked for.

BY TELEGRAPH TO DAILY FREEMAN.

GREAT BRITAIN.

London, July 28.

The presents received by Nilsson on her marriage, amount to £12,000. The Princess of Wales sent a diamond bracelet to her.

FRANCE.

Paris, July 28.

The French government contemplates the resumption of diplomatic relations with Mexico, the death of Juarez having removed the only obstacle thereto.

THE MEXICAN CLAIMS.

Washington July 28.

Since the advent of the new Mexican Commissioner in the joint commission of the United States and Mexico, grave differences have arisen between him and his American colleague, relative to the present status and future disposition of a large class of claims against the United States. A statement of differences of the Mexican government was laid before the commission. The new commissioner from the Mexican government refused to submit his opinion to the Empire. The American commissioner announced that he would treat this overthrow of the authority of the board and of the Empire, and this suspension of the cases, as a forced interruption of the labors of the commission. The suspension of 366 cases with no right to decide them is therefore a complete overthrow of the Convention, and breaks the Treaty unless the two governments provided a remedy.

THE CUBAN PRIVATEER, PIONEER.

Providence, R. I., July 28.

The alleged Cuban privateer, Pioneer, which has been lying at Newport in custody of the collector, for violation of the revenue laws, passed in charge of the U. S. Marshal Coggeshall Saturday on order of President Grant to hold the vessel for violation of the neutrality act of 1818.

INTERESTING NEWS FROM JAPAN.

San Francisco, July 28.

The steamship Colorado from Hong Kong June 27th, and Yokohama July 7th, has arrived. The Mikado left Yedo on the 25th ultimo accompanied by eight war steamers, intending to visit Keato and other portions of the southern country, and return in 40 days.

This is the first time in Japanese history that the Mikado embarked on such an excursion, and much good is expected to result from it.

The Tunisian steamer Sodrak being unable to pay her debts, the Japanese government ordered it to be sold, the Captain protesting.

Telegraphic communication between Yedo, Nagasaki and the outside world is to be completed within 5 weeks.

The Japanese mint is closed for extensive additions.

The government has decided upon the promulgation of a new form of religion upon careful consultation with the most noted exponents of each sect, and all will be compelled to conform thereto. The new religion will be enlightened and simple and adapted to common sense, and is likely to meet the approval of all classes.

Tea is eagerly taken at advanced rates. The quality is superior to last season.

The Pacific mail steamer was unable to meet the requirements of shippers. Three sailing vessels are under charter for San Francisco. Three hundred and fifty bales of new silk have been put in market which showed a marked difference in quality from the last shipments.

There is business enough offering from Yokohama alone to supply cargoes for four steamers per month for the summer season.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

New York, July 28.

The Greeley state committee of New Jersey yesterday passed a resolution requesting Jas. S. Scoville to resign his position as representative of the state in the National Convention.

It is stated that Ryan, who lately figured in the steamer Fannie expedition to Cuba, is to be arrested on arriving here on the charge of violating the neutrality laws.

The yacht Rambler, which won the Bennett cup on Saturday, sailed yesterday afternoon for Boston, where she is owned.

Saratoga letters state that Barnard's impeachment trial will probably be concluded in a week. Barnard will be on the witness stand during the week, as will also Thos. C. Durant, and Stokes the murderer of Fisk.

A meeting of carpenters and joiners was held last evening to organize measures to defeat those of the employers who propose to return to the 10 hour system.

President Grant leaves Long Branch Monday for a trip to the Thousand Islands, where he will stay some three weeks.

A letter is published from Jno. T. Pickett defending his sale of the late rebel documents to the government, on the ground that they really, of right, belonged to the United States, as residuary legatees of the defunct Confederacy. He says the abuse he is subjected to for their sale, comes from speculating scallwags, who now will not be unable to swindle the government with bogus claims.

There was a brilliant auroral display last night.

It is estimated that over fifty thousand people left the city yesterday to spend the Sunday in the suburbs, and an equal number filled excursion boats and trains to the sea shore and river resorts to-day. The weather is fine.

The funeral of engineer McCarthy, killed by a falling wall at the burning of the Erie cars, was attended to-day by the fire department of Jersey City, all the city officials and a large concourse of citizens.

LYNCHED BY A MOB OF THREE HUNDRED.

Kansas City, July 27.

James Sharp, who murdered John Erskine a week or two ago, was taken from jail at Waverburg yesterday morning by a mob of about three hundred persons, who represented themselves as leading citizens from all parts of the country, and hung him. The Sheriff resisted the mob, but they attacked the jail in front and rear, and breached the wall and took the prisoner. He confessed the murder. His body was delivered to his wife and three children.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

New Orleans, July 28.

Last evening's train wreck on the New Orleans & Jackson R. R. was thrown off the track near Magnolia. Kibborne, the baggage master, and Mrs. Baker of Texas were seriously, and several others severely hurt.

SPEECH OF CARL SCHURZ AT GREENSBORO, N. C.

New York, July 28.

A Greensboro, N. C. special states that Carl Schurz made a speech there last night, in which he said he belonged to the anti-slavery party all his life, and if he is not now fighting in the ranks of the Republican party, it was their fault, not his. He advocated the congressional acts of reconstruction in order to secure negroes their civil and political rights. After this it became their duty to secure political rights and privileges to rebels who had laid down their arms in good faith. Then it was that the flag of amnesty was planted with the flag of justice, and Greeley was its standard bearer. He said the Democratic party for years legislated to keep itself in power by corruption and fraud, and the Republican party was doing the same now. The Ku-Klux laws placed great power in the hands of the administration, which were being now used for the basest purpose: The federal arm was being reached into the affairs of States, and the mails were not even safe. He claimed that the votes of the colored men were corruptly controlled by carpet-baggers, who also robbed and plundered the South, and were contented in so doing by the Republican party, the Republican Congressmen and the administration. By its deputy Marshals the Republican party was at this time controlling the election south, and upholding the most atrocious system of government that ever cussed a people free in name only.

He then gave a history of the Liberal movement, maintaining that the Cincinnati banner was that of the true Republican party. He denied Boutwell's statement that the Democrats opposed immigration, and said that offensive taxation by plundering carpet-baggers was not an inducement to emigrants. He thought it strange Boutwell should advise Southerners against clashing hands over the bloody chasm of the war, saying, “The heart must be adequate to counsel against uniting in harmony, friendship, and peace, when the bloody chasm was bridged by clasped hands.” There would be no longer any need of the Republican party. The disclosure of the rebel plans to burn Northern cities was kept alive before the people of the North to keep alive the old war feeling; and if the Republican party could not live and prosper except by the despotism, corruption, and a revival of war animosities, it does not deserve to live. He urged the Republicans to trust rebel soldiers, who could not afford better evidence of their acceptance of the issues of the war than that they now rallied around the Greeley banner. He referred to the needs of the colored people, and advised them to cultivate friendly relations with the whites, for they never could live happy if the white man is not their friend. He claimed that if the colored vote, now compact and solid, were divided between the two political parties, both parties would be greatly interested in securing their rights.

In addressing the rebel soldiers present, he said there was full confidence felt in them in the North, but admonished them if armed hands were allowed to scourge citizens, no matter of what color, the Liberal Republicans would not be able to stem the channel of civilization, and protect them. If there are more recurrences of disorders, take swift and retributive measures into your hands, and let the Federal government see that the Confederate soldiers are not only idle, but willing and resolved that life and property shall be protected in your homes, your counties and in every one of your States.

He then read the letter of Pleasanton, relative to the San Domingo mission, closing by saying that now it simply remained a question of veracity between Pleasanton and President Grant.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Washington, July 28.

A large mass of very important testimony has been taken, disclosing immense and almost incredible frauds upon the Cherokees and Creeks, Choctaws, and Chickasaws, through means of corrupt bargains made by Indian delegates with Washington lobbyists and claim agents. The contingent fees in some instances aggregated to millions of dollars, in which the delegates had large pecuniary interests. The committee is said to be very indignant against the persons involved in these robberies of the ignorant Indians, and the cancellation and annulment of all such existing contracts will be recommended and insisted upon.

Gov. Samuel Bard of Chattanooga arrived here to-day and left for Long Branch to-night to formally lay before President Grant the invitation of the Mayor and City Council and the Board of Trade of Chattanooga to visit that city and Lookout Mountain during the present summer.

Acting Secretary of the Treasury, Richardson, has directed the Assistant Treasurer at New York to buy on the 1st and 24 Wednesday of August, $2,000,000 of bonds, and on the 2nd and 4th Wednesday $1,000,000, making six millions in all; and to sell on the 1st, 3rd and 5th Thursdays $1,000,000 of gold, and on the 2nd and 4th Thursdays, $2,000,000, making $7,000,000 in all.

POLITICS IN UTAH.

Salt Lake, July 27.

The Democratic Territorial Convention met this afternoon and nominated as delegate to Congress Geo. Q. Cannon, a prominent polygamist and apostle of the Mormon church.

The Cincinnati platform was endorsed, and a resolution adopted that the public sentiment of the nation and our own best interests alike require that the domestic institutions, and the local government here, should be moulded to conform with those of all other American communities. The nomination and resolution make quite a sensation.

There was a great ratification meeting this evening over the nomination of Gen. Maxwell, anti-mormon candidate for delegate to Congress.

THE BUFFALO RACES.

Buffalo, July 27.

Entries for the Buffalo Park August races closed to-night. Seventy-one horses were entered for the regular races, and three for the pairing race. The aggregate of the purses is $60,500. Notices of several entries by mail not yet received will be added to the list.

In the $10,000 purse for all horses, M. Roden enters B. G. Henry; B. Mace b. m. American Hick; Budd Doble, b. m. Goldsmith Maid; O. A. Glick; and M. Lucy.

OFFICIAL WEATHER REPORT.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER,
WASHINGTON, July 28, 9 P. M.

Probabilities.

Threatening weather with rain and southerly and easterly winds on the South Atlantic coast and in Virginia, and cloudy weather with southerly winds in the other Middle States; on the Upper Lakes southerly and westerly winds with rain and increasing cloudiness extending eastward, with westerly winds; northerly and westerly winds in the Ohio Valley and southward to the Gulf on Monday with clear weather.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES.

Mathew Madden was fatally shot yesterday at New York while attacking a policeman.

In remarks made to his friends on Saturday, Horace Greeley intimated that he would make no more speeches for several months.

Margaret Davis, alias Continental Mag, quarreled with John Graham yesterday at Philadelphia and fractured his skull with a pitcher. He was removed to the Hospital in a critical condition. She was committed. She keeps a house of disrepute.

The way England feels that she has been defeated in the Alabama negotiations, is evidenced by a cartoon in a London illustrated paper which represents the English lion with one paw on Grant and Fish, while they are begging for mercy.

LOOK AT THE FIGURES!
183,600 Machines per annum.
Many new machine companies have had their rise and fall—their machines once popular, now scarcely known—others have made radical changes in order to exist; while the Howe Machine Company have adhered to the opinion of "Elias Howe, Master of Mechanics." The machine is mechanically correct, does not change, built addition after addition to their factory, and to-day cannot supply the demand, although turning out six hundred machines a day—just a machine a minute.

The Howe Machine Co.
FOR FAMILIES AND
MANUFACTURERS.
THE GREAT PRIZE:
EXPOSITION UNIVERSELLE,
Paris, 1871.
Awarded over eighty-two competitors.
The Highest Premium,
THE ONLY CROSS OF THE LEGION OF HONOR AND GOLD MEDAL.
Given to American Sewing Machines, per Imperial Decree, published in the "Moniteur Universel" (Official Journal of the French Empire), Tuesday, 2d July, 1867, in these words:
"Fabricator of Machines a Sewing Machines, Exhibitor."
Are celebrated and known for doing the best work, using a straight and much smaller needle for the same thread than any other machine. They are adapted to any and all kinds of family sewing and manufacturing of every description, from fine lace to patent leather, making a beautiful and perfect Lock Stitch, alike on both sides of the article sewed, and will neither rip nor unravel, and use less thread.
Every one who has used the Howe Sewing Machine will testify that it is the best machine in the world that can make it. It is the oldest machine and has more improvements, and is easier performed than any other machine. The parts being exactly alike. If any of the parts need to be replaced, the operator can replace it, and it will outlast and outwear any other machine. They are remarkably simple and easily learned, sure in their operation, and almost impossible to break or get them out of order. They use any thread directly from the spool. The needle has a perpendicular motion, absolutely necessary for heavy work, runs easily, a stiff sewer, and almost noiseless. They do not add the dress of the operator, and do not have to be taken apart to oil and clean. The New Improved Family Machine cannot be surpassed in its without equal, and we CHALLENGE THE WORLD to produce a better machine on points of merit. A Farmer, Feller, Gardener, Brainer, Quilter, Tucking stude, and all the other necessary Tools go with each machine, free of charge.
Beware of spurious and bogus Howe's. The undersigned is the only authorized Agent for the Genuine Howe Machine.
